Biography

Gabe Sierra is the Managing Director of Prometrix Consulting, Inc. With more than 20 years of industry and government experience, Mr. Sierra has extensive professional expertise in industrial engineering and construction, OSHA regulatory management, manufacturing, technology innovation, business strategy, and marketing.

Prior to founding Prometrix Consulting, Mr. Sierra was appointed and served as the Chief of Staff for OSHA (Occupational Safety and Health Administration), where he served from 2006 to 2009. During his tenure as a senior member of the Assistant Secretary's management team, the injury / illness and fatality rates declined to the lowest levels in the nation's history enabled by the utilization of all the tools available through the Occupational Safety & Health Act of 1970.

Mr. Sierra has a proven track record for delivering significant results along each step of his career path. These international achievements range from successfully completing multi-hundred million dollar petrochemical construction projects within its business objectives while exceeding safety performance goals; advising the Board of a medium-size construction company in Eastern Europe on performance issues; to identifying and implementing strategic initiatives that directly helped an automation technology provider to seek >$250 million of profitable sales growth opportunity.

Mr. Sierra possesses seven utility patents from the US Patent & Trademark Office and has published a number of high circulation trade articles on the subject of industrial wireless technology. He holds a BS Electrical Engineering from the University of Florida and an MBA from Indiana University. Sierra's career path includes assignments with Amoco, Emerson Process Management, OSHA, and Koch Industries.
